Notes

The management of community or stray cats is a societal responsibility, which an ethical society needs to achieve humanely. There is ample evidence that Trap-Neuter-Return is an effective and humane management policy/practice, and there are plenty of skilled practitioners out there, who would make use of official support in their work very cost-effectively. While it may be cheaper in the short term to use some inhumane and ecologically very questionable poison to destroy cats, this is not what an ethical society does. In the same way that it does not deal with vulnerable society members in the cheapest way.
