Herbicides kill the soil. We have to wean ourselves off these poisons and easy fixes. NZ must stop this because our competitive advantage is that we are distant from the major countries of pollution in the world and are perfectly placed to plant organic crops and have pure water. But the mindset is to continue to pour poison on our soil and not think about the effects of this on our people and on our land. There is easy talk about caring for the environment and the "climate change" calls are now little more than what amounts to a cult, but we continue to ignore what we can DO at home. We must first do no harm. We must look after and nurture our land. In that way we can sell our produce at a premium on the world market. NZ must become organic. It is the best way. <https://www.intechopen.com/books/herbicides-current-research-and-case-studies-in-use/toxicity-of-herbicides-impact-on-aquatic-and-soil-biota-and-human-health>
