Notes

A fundamental principle when considering any proposal is 'do no harm'. It is time to stop the pollution and restore the health of our waterways. In the 21st century, any proposal that is known to pollute the environment should be rejected. It is unacceptable to 'do harm' and expect others to remedy the damage, or simply turn a blind eye for the sake of short-term pecunary gain. Granting the protection order should ensure no harm is done and have the effect of requiring resource consent applications to include provisions that prevent pollution.
